

Gerard Foley

Chief of Growth

Gerard Foley is the Chief of Growth for Raytheon Australia with enterprise-wide responsibility for business growth, opportunity development and capture, enterprise strategic relationships as well as mergers and acquisitions.

In this role Gerard leads the growth of the company through defining and implementing the corporate growth strategy, managing competitive and customer relationships and determining new business investment priorities in order to achieve growth targets.

Gerard joined Raytheon in 2000 and has held key leadership appointments in profit and loss, growth and strategy portfolios. He has also worked for Raytheon International Inc whilst living in the United States as Regional Director for South Asia and Australia based in Washington D.C.

Prior to joining Raytheon, Gerard worked in the Information Technology sector as a project manager and sales executive. He also enjoyed a rewarding career in the Australian Defence Force as an Army officer specialising in aviation engineering, leadership instruction and major capital equipment acquisition.

Gerard holds an honours degree in electrical engineering from the University of New South Wales, and a Master of Science from Cranfield University, UK. He is a Fellow of Engineers Australia, a Chartered Professional Engineer, is listed on the National Engineer Register and is an International Professional Engineer (Aus).
