

Rick Hunt is vice president of the Raytheon U.S. Business Development organization. Raytheon Company (NYSE: RTN), with 2014 sales of $23 billion and 61,000 employees worldwide, is a technology and innovation leader specializing in defense, security and civil markets throughout the world. Raytheon is headquartered in Waltham, Mass.

Hunt leads the U.S. Business Development team and is responsible for Raytheon's strategic relationship with U.S. military and civil government customers. He works closely with the four businesses, Corporate Strategy, Government Relations and Raytheon International, Inc. (RII), to develop strategic goals and objectives to propel growth in core and adjacent markets. Hunt is based in Arlington, Va., and reports to the Business Development vice president and RII chief executive officer.

Previously Hunt was vice president of Navy and Marine Corps programs. He was responsible for identifying and pursuing U.S. Navy and Marine Corps business growth opportunities and was one of Raytheon's primary contacts with Navy customers. He led the team to actively pursue opportunities in the evolving cyber area, undersea growth and next generation strike weapons.

Biography

Prior to joining Raytheon, Hunt served in the U.S. Navy for 37 years, retiring at the rank of Vice Admiral while serving as Director of Navy Staff. His other shore assignments included serving as Executive Assistant to Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff; deputy director, Strategy and Policy, Joint Staff (J5); and director, Programming Division (N80). Hunt held numerous commands, including Commander, Carrier Strike Group Six; Commander, Combined Joint Task Force-Horn of Africa; Commander, U.S. THIRD Fleet; and Commander, Naval Surface Forces/Commander, Naval Surface Force, U.S. Pacific Fleet. He commanded the USS Crommelin (FFG 37) and USS Philippine Sea (CG 58).

Hunt graduated from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and holds a master's degree in telecommunications systems management from the Naval Postgraduate School.